MOVE TO ARREST THE DECLINING EDUCATION STANDARDS IN TAITA TAVETA

BY CAROLINE MANGO

THE dwindling standards of education in Taita Taveta - attributed to early marriages, unwanted pregnancies and rampant drug abuse - are worrying.

Girls are more vulnerable as cases of incest and other forms of sexual abuse go on unabated.

Reports abound in Taita Taveta about custodians including teachers, headmasters, chiefs and even elected leaders trusted to protect girls who have turned against them, taking advantage of the high poverty levels in the region to turn girls into sex slaves.

In the county, girls from the age of 13 are giving birth and many parents do not raise a finger. In some cases, the parents organise and preside over 'kangaroo courts' to settle rape or incest cases, by either marrying off their daughters or receiving cash from culprits "to make up for the mistake or inconvenience caused."

This worrying trend has prompted a group of young leaders who went to school in Taita Taveta county to try and arrest the declining education standards.

The old boys and girls from Taita Taveta have taken the first step, through a mentorship initiative, aimed at getting more teenage girls, victims of female genital mutilation, incest and drug abuse back on their feet again. The Undugu Mentorship Initiative, registered as a Community based Organisation (CBO) in 2008, is leading by example in the campaign to save the girl-child in Taita Taveta.

In their own small way, the members of the group have continued to give hope to the girls. "This programme's main goal is to realise improved academic performance in the region and therefore lead to increased enrollment of students into universities and other institutions of higher learning," Reuben Shuma, the secretary of Undugu Mentorship Initiative said.

He added, "This initiative works to influence students in secondary schools to make appropriate decisions and take responsibility of their lives. It is to awaken the desire to excel. We the old students and sons and daughters from Taita Taveta engage in mentoring, role modeling, community advocacy and sensitization programmes."

The organization has been working with volunteers who sacrifice their time and resources in an attempt to improve the education and ultimately the development of the region. In the last two years, sixteen volunteers have been working with nine schools in the county.

The initiative is currently recruiting volunteers who will work as mentors for students in the county. The group has an ambitious programme to register up to 200 mentees by the end of this year and grow the number to 500 by 2013 and 1,000 by 2015.

According to the Undugu official, drug abuse in Coast province, which is growing at an alarming rate especially among children aged under 18, is worrying.

Shuma, however, notes that their efforts will come to naught if they don't get support from other stakeholders. "We want to partner with interest groups in education, religion, NGOs, government etc in reaching out to the youth to affect them positively and empower them to make decisions that will ultimately improve their lives. So far, we have had to finance many of these programmes from our own pockets."

For example, the officials have had to sponsor two girls whose parents were unable to finance their secondary school education.

"As members, we contribute between Sh1,500 and Sh2,000 to be able to undertake some of these activities," Shuma said.

The magnitude of the problem in Taita Taveta is clearly illustrated in the 2009 KCSE results where the whole of Taita Taveta, comprising of Voi, Mwatate, Wundanyi and Taveta constituencies, produced only one plain A and 18 A minuses.

The latest statistics show that over 30 girls in both primary and secondary schools in Taita dropped out of school last year due to pregnancies. If that is not bad enough, over 40 schoolgirls under the age of 17 have been sexually abused in Taita district.

By October last year, child abuse cases stood at 24 in primary and 16 in secondary schools. The Undugu initiative's officials - Danson Mwashako (Chairman), Reuben Shuma (Secretary), Samson Mwahole (Treasurer), Thomas Mwaengo (Organising secretary) and Edmund Tole (Vice Chairman) - are the engines driving the organisation's activities.

Recently, the group organized a forum to engage the area leadership about matters touching the youth in the county, and in particular about education issues. It also doubled up as a fundraising event.

The dinner gala was attended by two MPS from Taita Taveta - Thomas Mwaenghu and Calistus Mwatela who is coincidentally the assistant minister for education. Former MP Marsden Madoka also attended the event. Minister Naomi Shaban was absent with apologies due to official commitments elsewhere.

Although the target was to raise at least Sh1 million to be able to continue sponsoring several girls in school, less than a quarter of that was realised.

The organisation's officials are now calling on all well-wishers to help them achieve their goals.

"If you help get one girl back to school, the impact will be felt almost immediately. We are determined to change the worrying trend back at home. It takes me and you to make a difference in one's life," Shuma concluded.
